

We picked up our pup on Friday the 7th May 2010, thanks to you Anne-mari and Breeder. We named her Marmite and she weighs 1.2kg. We showed her around the house, introduced her to all her belongings and she loves them.

The first two nights were a bit hectic for us as we took turns in waking up every 3 hours to make sure Marmite was okay, doing her business on the news paper, that she was warm enough and needless to say she was a “sleeping beauty”.

We had absolute fun with her over the weekend, ran around playing silly buggers with her even when it came to vacuuming the house and could not resist but take a few pictures. Family members and friends came over for lunch to meet her, they love the new addition to the family. She was extremely exhausted that evening and sleeping was not an issue for her as she does so well at it most of the day.

During the week she has been going to “GGMa”, Daryl’s Gran to be baby sat until we come home from work. She is still too small to be left on her own. So early trips in the car in the mornings are never a hassle for her. She is put into her soft crate and away we go.

“GGMa” spoils her during the day, I am sure and gives her lots of kisses on her tummy.

She also had her first outing to the shops. She started shaking with excitement as strangers came up to her to touch her cause she is just too cute.

Potty training has been interesting but she’ll get the hang of it. She seems to enjoy the treats that she receives when succeeding on the newspaper...not so fun when accidents happen in other parts of the house. She’s not familiar and happy with the fact that she has to be on the leash when going outside, she tends to walk backwards but we’ll work on that.

She’s eating pellets now and knows where her water is when she’s thirsty. Gave her a bath for the first time, she did not think that that was fun! As soon as she was done I put her on my lap to dry her and with me repeatedly kissing her on her head she calmed down and fell asleep.

Thanks to “GGMa” her ears are up and a bit pointy not folded back!

This is all very new to us (myself and Daryl), very much like parenthood and we are enjoying every minute of it. Can’t stop loving her and fighting over who is going to put her on who’s lap. She is such a good pup and nothing seems to faze her, especially when you are playing rough with her...she let’s out this big bark that sweeps you off your feet. The harder you play the more she growls and jumps around, such entertainment and laughter.

First night home, very tired! As you can see her bed is rather big for her but I am sure she will grow into it.

Here she is with her favourite toy (the one that she can carry around and that is not too big for her), thanks to her Aunty Erica and Uncle Steve.

This photo proves that she can be our racing dog one day—Greyhound :) She does the cutest thing when the sun is shining, she enjoys chasing her shadow.!

This was taken when she had the plasters in the inside of her ears to keep them up...it worked!
